

Denise: hindleap appeal fundraiser

I worked for many years as an incentive travel and sales co-ordinator for Qantas Airlines and Thomson Travel, designing and marketing tailor-made itineraries to destinations across the world.

Following a year in Australia I reluctantly returned to London and to work.

In the early nineties I transferred my skills in events management and marketing to the voluntary sector, working for two charities that specialised in implementing educational and training projects in the developing world.

Caring for my children was my priority in the late nineties but I finally emerged from the world of toddler groups to work for Greenwich Council, local schools and community groups on a range of social and educational projects as a project designer and fundraising consultant.
